WE House

Project Information Sheet

The Women Empowerment House (WE House) is a collaborative space for workers, shared and jointly run by the Women’s Union Network, Solidarity Center with funding support from USAID and GIZ’s regional “Promoting Sustainability in the Textile and Garment Industry in Asia” (FABRIC) programme.

The WE House provides a space where workers can access a supportive environment which provides for learning and recreation where they can discuss work-related and gender- specific issues and access relevant support services. Situated in close proximity to Veng Sreng Boulevard where many garment factories are located and an estimated 40,000 – 50,000 workers reside, the WE House has a specific focus on reaching young women workers from the garment industry.

The objectives of the WE House project are to:

- Increase the knowledge of workers about their labour rights and responsibilities and life skills with a particular focus on women garment workers.
- Provide a space where workers can access relevant support services such as legal advice, counselling and health education.
- Provide capacity building opportunities to the WUN members and their respective unions to increase their knowledge and organizational capacities to promote labour rights and address gender-based issues such as discrimination and violence and harassment.

Getting involved

We are looking for all kinds of partners that share our values and vision to enhance women empowerment and labour rights. While we are open to exploring all kinds of possible collaborations, we are particularly interested in connecting with organisations who can provide support and education regarding financial literacy, psychosocial support, women’s health, and legal counselling and support services.

Contact us and we can give you a tour of the house and exchange about opportunities: You can find us online on:
